New Zealand's Mike Moore Ambassador designate to the United States.

“The Pursuit of Free Trade and the Next Generation of Business Leadership”

Hear Mike Moore, former New Zealand Prime Minister and former Director-General at The World Trade Organisation, before he heads to Washington to be New Zealand's next Ambassador to the United States.

Mike Moore began his parliamentary career in 1972, becoming the youngest Member of Parliament ever elected. As a government minister he has held numerous portfolios, becoming best known in his role as Overseas Trade Minister with involvement in the GATT negotiations. In 1987 he also became Minister of External Relations and in 1988 Deputy Minister of Finance. In 1990 he became leader of the Labour Party.

In 1998 he ran for the post of Director-General of the World Trade Organisation and was elected to this position on 22 July 1999. He took up the post on the 1st of September 1999 until 2002. His term coincided with momentous changes in the global economy and multilateral trading system.

He is widely credited with restoring confidence in the system following the setback of the 3rd WTO Ministerial Conference held in Seattle in 1999. Ministers at the 4th WTO Ministerial Conference in Doha, Qatar respect him as the driving force behind the decision to launch a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. That meeting in 2001 also saw the successful accession to the WTO of China and Chinese Taipei, which along with Estonia, Jordan, Georgia, Albania, Oman, Croatia, Lithuania and Moldova joined during Mr Moore's term bringing in the majority of the world's population within the rules-based trading system. He gave particular attention to helping poor countries participate effectively in the multilateral trading system.
